"I believe education is the answer ... that's why my team and I will spend the next four months in the Arctic, documenting climate change and the challenges facing the 5,000-year-old Inuit civilization. Students of all ages can track our progress, LIVE, at GlobalWarming101.com. I hope you'll log on and enjoy this truly unique educational experience. Seeing is believing."

– Will Steger, National Geographic Award-winning Arctic Explorer

Dear

As a teacher, you must take great pride in having a positive impact on everyone you teach.

It must be exciting to find unique educational opportunities that are both fascinating in the classroom and also make lasting impressions on tomorrow's leaders. Following renowned polar explorer Will Steger through the Arctic on his upcoming expedition, GlobalWarming101.com, is such an opportunity. Called "The Jacques Cousteau of the Poles," Will has chronicled the impact of climate change on the world's polar regions for 20 years. In fact, three of Will's polar expeditions were cited in The Greatest Adventures of All Time, published by Life books.

Will's considers GlobalWarming101.com, to be his most important expedition. It begins on Feb. 14 in a village called Iqaluit on Baffin Island in the Canadian Arctic and spans 1,200 miles through five Inuit communities – some of the world's most isolated and remote villages. These local people, indigenous to the Arctic coasts, are most severely impacted by climate change.

As you know, Global Warming is now being discussed at the highest government levels, in boardrooms, and in classrooms around the globe. This will remain true for decades to come. Will Steger believes that as an educator, YOU hold the key.

Will is committed to sharing expedition findings, and National Geographic is doing its part to make this education simple and easy. Lesson Plans for grades 6-12 and activities for grades K-12 that have been approved by National Geographic are available at no charge at GlobalWarming101.com. To complement the lessons, Will and the expedition team will provide first hand, real time daily audio and video updates on the trek which can be fed right into the classroom via the Internet.

Shaklee Corporation, a proud sponsor of Will Steger for more than 20 years, is providing free poster-size maps of the expedition route for classroom use. This is a fantastic teaching tool for you and your students.

I'll be calling soon to set up a time to drop off your packet and discuss how you and your students can join the global community in this rare educational opportunity.

I look forward to meeting with you soon.

Best,
